Bring Filmmaking Skills to Your Students

The Coffs Coast's Screenwave International Film Festival has launched a new national service for teachers to easily bring film education into the classroom – no previous experience required.

As technology becomes ever more accessible, filmmaking has changed from an expensive arts skill into an affordable and valuable communications skill for the future – social media, documenting school projects, YouTube channels, Tik Tok, video presentations. Film is now mainstream.

The aim of Nextwave Online is to also develop filmmaking skills in you as a teacher, and to provide your students new methods to showcase their excellence through film, such as in school work, national short film competitions, potential internship opportunities, careers in film and the creative industries, and so much more.

Nextwave Modules - Start to End Filmmaking

- Getting started
- Finding inspiration
- Writing a story
- Basic film aesthetics
- Pre-production planning
- Camera basics
- Running a film set
- Video editing basics
- Film sound
- Getting your film out there

"Nextwave has given me a foot in the industry. It's a great achievement to add to my resume."

Benjamin,
Nextwave Competition Winner

School Subscription

Over 3 hours (10x 25 mins) of fun and educational learning modules

Companion guides, discussion leaders, activity sheets & extra resources

Access to an archive of winning short films

Suitable for students aged 10-18

Individual user access for every teacher and student

Use for classroom, independent or remote learning

Dedicated teachers' monthly e-newsletter and support service

Integrate into elective course curriculum

How It Works

Purchase your school subscription to teach a complete introductory filmmaking course to you and your students, either in the classroom, or accessed remotely.

Teachers are supported with companion guides for every episode, regular dedicated teachers' e-newsletter, plus activity sheets and additional resources, along with direct teacher support from the Nextwave team.

Subscriptions run calendar year with next year's intake closing November 15. With no prior or assumed knowledge, Nextwave Online will take you and your students to an independent learning level.

- Learn via 3+ hours of film education
- Classroom, home & remote learning
- Companion guides for each module
- Students & teachers have individual logins
- Class management tools available
- New education content added each year

"The content on how to make a film was exactly what we all needed to hear."

Catherine, Visual Arts Teacher,

National Youth Film Competition

Your students can immediately put their newfound skills into practice by entering their own short film into the annual Nextwave youth film competition.

There are tens of thousands of dollars in prizes available for finalists and winners each year. The Best School in each State and Territory is also awarded a trophy for your school's trophy cabinet!

Nextwave competition finalists' and winners' films are premiered at the Nextwave Youth Film Awards gala night, hosted at SWIFF in Coffs Harbour each year.

Development opportunities and industry connections await students demonstrating passion, talent, and dedication.

Who We Are

Presented by the Screenwave International Film Festival (swiff.com.au) and supported by Southern Cross University (scu.edu.au), Nextwave provides a platform for the next generation of Australian Filmmakers, empowering and educating young people and their teachers with visual storytelling and video documentation skills for the future.

Bookings

Schools can purchase their subscription directly through the website or contact the Nextwave team directly to secure your school's subscription.
